

Title: Construction? , Destruction

“This photo represents the destruction which construction can lead to, showing plastic bottles and paper bags which are major causes of pollution in NZ.”

Every year, New Zealand industries and households discard over 3 million tonnes of construction and demolition debris to landfills and cleanfills. Although landfill space is not quite the same problem here as it is in more densely populated countries, landfills in some of our larger urban areas in New Zealand are reaching capacity and the availability of new space is limited by local opposition.
